

From p 17

Mukul BLOWS hot with his third

get the political leadership you deserve'—Raje could not resist taking the mike to point out gently citizens would be able to raise the bar if they spoke out rather than cursing the system. "You should raise your voice or get what you deserve at the end of it," she said.

But the city was not complaining at getting it back! Because, ultimately, sessions like this one are an "enriching experience, for you talk directly with the writer rather than listening in and having a glass of wine," as Vidya Devi said. "I must say the catalyst is the Lit Fest... it has paved the way for this," she vouched.

Adding on to this train of thought, social worker and avid reader Ravi Hooja said, "This kind of event is great as a lot of socio-economic and cultural factors are expressed in addition to what the book is all about."

So, please come back soon with your fourth, Mukul (and he will, considering he writes and travels with military precision). Jaipur would be quite happy to read, share and argue with you.